PDFÂ . Its up and running, and of course at least one of the above is incorrect. its work great on my computer except for one thing. I'm trying to use it at work where there's no internet, can't download it for free, so I was looking for something else to use instead.. I don't think they run on internet so I can't do that either. So, is there anything else that you can recommend? A: I would use the PDF writer in Microsoft Office Open XML, save to an mp3, and burn to a CD or DVD. This is the highest quality digital format. Free and open source so you have nothing to lose, though you could lose any royalties your publisher might have demanded. Q: Can I stop mediaplayer after a timeout? I have the following scenario in an app I'm working on. Basically when the screen is showing, the MediaPlayer starts playing. As I go out of screen, I have already stopped the MediaPlayer. If I press back button, it will move me back to the screen from where I was previously. Now, what should happen is, as I press the back button, my MediaPlayer should again start playing, but after a certain set time out. If I press back button again, it should move me back to the screen from where I was previously, but it must stop the mediaplayer after some time out, because I have already set a timeout for it. How do I achieve this? A: You can use the ACTION_TIME_TICK to create a repeating timer for recording the current time. Q: C/C++: How to avoid loops when you have only a certain kind of condition? In a for loop in C/C++ you write for(i=0;i
