Developer: Armor Games Studios
Gameplay: Final Battle: The Ultimate Challenge, Breakout FPS, Arcade Breakout Shot, Action-Shooter
Ships 60 particles per second (PPS) and five different types of weapons, including flame and laser jets, laser shotguns, super-charged lasers and strobe and freeze beams. This is a "WTF" game of survival that puts your wits and reflexes to the test in 30 levels, all procedurally generated. The right-click on the X-axis will lock on to all opponents, or the left click will lock on to a target. There's no way to win this game. You simply have to be the last man standing. I have been looking for one of these games for a while. In trying to play a game like this, I first tried this one from the official site at Armor Games Studios. It is also available as a cheap download from several other sources. The graphics are pretty basic but they do a great job of showing you what you are up against and the amount of gameplay there is to it. The controls are very basic with just a mouse pointer and keyboard control of your ship. The game begins with you stranded on an unknown planet with little knowledge of the enemy or what you need to do to survive. A nasty alien with tentacles tries to convince you that your destiny lies on another planet. You've been given a briefcase which contains a device for which there is no key. You are given some lessons on how to use your device and eventually, you are taken to the same planet from which you began. You are given a chance to escape and one of your options is to destroy the device before it destroys you. The device is a "Stargate" and the idea is that you can use this device to get to other planets. The system is like a portal to other worlds. It can only take one person at a time. When you take your first journey on your alien planet, you find that you are up against the king of the planet. If you defeat the king, you move up in level, and the king will not allow you to take any more people. The king has access to a number of weapons that are obviously meant to weaken you and give him the victory. It is your job to come up with a strategy for survival. You don't need to be the last one standing. You have two options, either to shoot down
