The present invention relates to the field of non-spherical polycarbonate lenses, including contact lenses and intraocular lenses.

Polycarbonate lenses offer many benefits over conventional hydrogel lenses. These benefits include a high oxygen permeability to provide a more comfortable environment for contact lens wearers (Am. J. Ophthalmol. 103, 339-342, 1989), and a low coefficient of friction for glistening free movements. Polycarbonate lenses have the disadvantage, however, of being non-spherical. Spherical lenses have the advantage of being able to be molded in any of several shapes to achieve a desired vision correction. To date, however, attempts to mold non-spherical polycarbonate lenses have not been successful, and non-spherical lenses have generally been manufactured by lathing. Attenuation of the initial oxygen burst during reperfusion does not change oxygen-dependent early injury in isolated rabbit hearts. The aim of this study was to examine the effect of oxygen availability on the release of oxygen metabolites during ischaemia, and the myocardial protective effect of moderate oxygenation of the tissue during reperfusion. Isolated working rabbit hearts
