The first outbreak of CHIKV in the Western hemisphere was reported in 2013 in the Caribbean island of St. Martin ([@R2]). Recent cases of CHIKV have been reported in the Americas ([@R3]-[@R8]) and globally ([@R9]-[@R11]), including in the United States ([@R12]-[@R15]). Two CHIKV strains, ECSA (East/Central/South African) genotype ([@R16]) and Asian genotype ([@R17]), have been isolated from various regions of the Americas ([@R16]-[@R18]). However, CHIKV has yet to be detected in Colombia ([@R19]). In December 2014, a confirmed case of CHIKV infection in an 18-year-old man from central Colombia was reported to the Dirección de Epidemiología Nacional of Colombia. The man reported having headache, rash,
