Field of the Invention This invention relates to a wheel supporting device for an automobile in which a high-frequency induction motor is used as a drive source for the wheel. 2. Description of the Prior Art The low-speed wheel supporting device for an automobile using a high-frequency induction motor as a drive source is generally provided with an anti-lock brake system (ABS), a suspension control system (TCS) or a traction control system (TCS). FIG. 1 shows a wheel supporting device which is provided with an anti-lock brake system, suspension control system or a traction control system (hereinafter collectively referred to as "ABS/TCS"). As shown in the drawing, the wheel supporting device includes a wheel hub 4 which is integral with an axle 3 of an automobile, a brake rotor 2 fitted around the periphery of the wheel hub 4, an anti-lock brake system (ABS) motor 6 located in the vehicle body and drivingly connected with the wheel hub 4 through a clutch 5, and an electromagnetic clutch 7. The ABS motor 6 is a high-frequency induction motor which is energized with alternating current (AC) voltage. The ABS motor 6 is energized with AC voltage from the vehicle body side. The wheel hub 4 is connected to the vehicle body side through a clutch 5. The ABS motor 6 is connected with the wheel hub 4 through the clutch 5 to transmit power from the ABS motor 6 to the wheel hub 4. The electromagnetic clutch 7 includes a rotary member (rotor) 8 connected with a power supply side through a switch 9, a rotary member (stator) 10 fitted in a non-rotatable state with respect to the rotary member 8, a thrust bearing 11 disposed between the rotary member 8 and the rotary member 10, and an electromagnetic coil 12 fitted around the rotary member 10. The rotary member 8 is connected to a motor 2d92ce491b
