Millionaire survivalist gives first interview since killing spree posted by Bill Strange - Oct 22, 2018 The news that a multi-millionaire survivalist from South Florida is the suspected killer of four people, including two police officers and two children has the nation watching. The man, a 47-year-old who lives in a heavily guarded compound in rural Massachusetts, who goes by the online name "Joe Stack," wrote on Twitter hours before his house blew up, "Just killed cops, they tried to kill me." In a three-hour interview with a local television news team outside his compound in rural Stockbridge, Massachusetts, Stack appeared open and affable, revealing little of what is being called a well-planned, well-funded killing spree. "Did you do this alone or with others?" CBS News reporter David Begnaud asked. "This is entirely my idea," he responded. According to a witness at the scene, Stack appeared to be nervous as he moved in and out of the house, possibly carrying a suitcase and traveling in a black sport utility vehicle. "He looked like he was a little bit nervous, but he didn't seem like he was afraid, like, something bad was going to happen," he said. Investigators say they believe Stack killed two U.S. Forest Service workers, shot two of their colleagues at a photo processing business, and then opened fire at police headquarters in Colorado, killing two police officers and two civilians. The suspect had made a run at the federal building in downtown Denver on Sept. 26. Stack spent a decade preparing for just such a situation. His Twitter bio describes himself as the author of "the un-likely survival story" and says he learned how to make an AK-47 and a flamethrower from a friend who worked at a gun shop. "This is my hobby. I am a hobbyist, I do this on a part-time basis," he told the television station WGGB-TV in Glens Falls, New York

Our research will focus on polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) as a prototype for aflatoxin-derived electrophiles since they are the most common class of carcinogenic and/or cytotoxic chemicals to which man is exposed. Our previous studies have shown that the toxicity of aflatoxin-derived electrophiles is mediated by their reaction with DNA to form DNA adducts. Our current research has confirmed that the toxicity of AFTE is mediated by a similar mechanism, but has shown that AFTE are also capable of crosslinking proteins. In the proposed research we will analyze the binding and crosslinking properties of aflatoxin-derived electrophiles in cell-free systems. We will also examine the reactivity of these compounds in cell culture systems in order to gain insight into the mechanisms of toxicity of these electrophiles to mammalian cells. The principal goal of the proposed research is to gain a better understanding of the mechanisms by which AFTE cause toxicity. This understanding will aid in the design of strategies to prevent or treat toxicity caused by the consumption of dietary or environmental mycotoxins. Q: Are questions that have been downvoted and closed in some way off topic? I have been working on getting into the early stages of Stack Overflow. One of the things that I have seen is that when a new user asks a question that has been closed as off topic or too broad, he seems to put it down as a bug of Stack Overflow and he is scared of asking his question again on Stack Overflow. Would it be better to answer a question once closed as off topic and then let the user know he should ask the question on a different platform or is this a bug and will these questions never be available to the users who ask them? A: No. The best thing you can do to improve the chances of your question being reopened is to make it into a great question. Is your question about...? Is it written for more than just an expert in the field? Do you have a title? Have you made your question as detailed as possible? Are you a new user? Does 2d92ce491b
