Is there any scope to tag my own question? Suppose that my question is specific to my personal situation and I just want someone to explain the basic concepts to me. Should I then go ahead and tag my own question with questions like "What is the difference between an object and a value", "What are the types of variables in C#". These things I would like to understand myself, but they are still simple concepts that are easy to Google and I simply don't want to read through pages and pages of documentation. Do I have to wait for others to propose the tags for me? Or is there any opportunity to do so myself?

Thanks, A: As with any question of this nature, it is always your call.

You can either wait for an answer, or ask the question first and seek an answer once an answer is ready. If you do the latter, the old tag request will still show, but visitors can ignore it, since it's not their post. Just be careful to ask as concise a question as possible. If you are asking for a list of terms (which does get borderline prohibited in many instances), you need to be able to read at a more advanced level to understand what questions you're asking. The potential answerer may not have that advanced level, and require more explanation than a basic question and answer format would allow. Q: PrimeFaces application theme for IBM i How can I set the PrimeFaces default theme for my application which is running on IBM i? I know that the default PrimeFaces theme is i. A: The default PrimeFaces theme is as stated in the question. But you can get more information on how to set the theme for the current PrimeFaces version in the PrimeFaces web site: Building a Bioeconomy By John K.
