Oxford Olympics: Dons close their eyes to watch From a posh hotel in Stockholm we watched today's opening ceremony through the eyes of five classic Dons. The opening ceremony was not without its surprises for some of the Oxford College sporting teams, who are now being forced to get used to the idea of being the lesser mortals of the 2012 Olympics. Despite not having been invited to the Games, Oxford's rowing crews are being forced to watch the opening ceremony as an extra hurdle to be overcome in their bid to be part of the GB crew. The university also boasts two sportsmen that are competing in this summer's Olympics and are, for the moment at least, undefeated in their sport: double sculler Will Fletcher and mountaineer Mark Sutton. We'd love to see a couple of Oxford's other sporting stars make their mark at the Games but sadly, for the time being, Oxford's glory days lie behind us. Here's a look at what the rest of the British teams are doing and a few words from our sports fans. Chris Edlmann
