However, NVIDIA's Jetson AGX Xavier recently has been announced and will likely be used for computer vision and other Deep Learning applications. Read on to see a comparison of NVIDIA's Tensor RT and NVIDIA's Xavier. NVIDIA Tensor RT Tensor RT offers a Machine Learning library for Python, C++, and JS with the ability to interface to Tensorflow, Caffe2, or MXNet. Additionally, it supports not only inference, but training as well with all the features of a Deep Learning library such as HDF5, Tensorboard, etc. The NVIDIA Tensor RT supports Deep Learning applications such as CNN, RNN, object recognition, and motion detection. In this blog post, we used Deep Learning in Microsoft Azure to train an object recognition model. Deep Learning uses neural networks to learn and understand data which is capable of training even a model with as little as a single image. In Azure, we can train a Deep Learning model in the cloud with the Compute Engine P2 D3D12 Accelerator. We then deploy the trained model in our clouds for inference. By re-using a trained model, we are able to reduce the training time and cost of the model. In our blog post on Deep Learning in Azure, 3ef4e8ef8d
