If you find yourself in a situation where you're being exploited or taken advantage of in some way, you might want to try to see if there are ways to prevent it from happening again.

1. Psychological Price Gouging Psychological price gouging is when you use unethical or illegal methods to raise the price of something and keep it high for as long as possible. It's a form of price fixing because you're deliberately inflating the price for the sake of making money off of someone else. There are many ways to psychologically price gouge, but a common one is to intentionally cause injury to yourself or others. For example, if you leave a moose on the side of the road and it becomes the topic of conversation and a deterrent to someone driving by, you're psychologically gouging. By telling yourself you're in pain for as long as possible, you're psychologically price gouging the person driving by who now has to stop and deal with the moose.
2. Financial Price Gouging Financial price gouging is when you intentionally cause harm to yourself or others by engaging in illegal or unethical behavior. Financial price gouging can be used as a form of psychological price gouging, but it can also occur when you knowingly destroy something that someone else needs (e.g. destroy an engine on a car, break a window of a bank, etc.). If you do this intentionally, you're breaking the law and making money off of the person who needs the car or the bank.
3. Competitive Price Gouging Competitive price gouging is when you raise the price of something you're selling in order to make yourself appear to be more attractive to others. For example, if you're going to a wedding and want to buy a bottle of wine, it's a good idea to make sure you get the 1d6a3396d6

There are a lot of times when you want to be able to read, edit, and save files easily. You could use the standard windows file manager, but then, you might get annoyed because it could take a long time to open, navigate, and close the folder window. The former is a native Windows file manager, while the latter is for Mac. To bring two of these solutions into your PC, check out Total Commander and DC Explorer which are both free and open-source. Total Commander Total Commander is a native Windows file manager that provides an extremely easy way to work with folders. It is really lightweight and it only takes up a few megabytes of space. DC Explorer The DC Explorer is a Mac file manager that can also serve as a portable version of the mac desktop. It has a similar interface as Total Commander, and it can also be set up to work with FTP servers and other tasks. This tool can show various information about the files and folders, such as file and folder properties. You can also enable or disable some of its features. However, there are some downsides about it. For example, its interface is a bit old-fashioned, and it can be a bit slow. Both applications are really lightweight, and they are easy to install. All you need to do is download and extract them, and then run the executable file to start using them. Final thoughts Both Total Commander and DC Explorer are really easy-to-use tools, and they do not require a lot of configuration to use them. They are also compatible with a wide variety of file formats, so you can use them to work with most of the files on your computer. If you want to make sure you do not become a victim of this strategy, you should check the hashes of all files you get from the Internet. OpenHashTab is one of the applications you can turn to for helping you check the hashes of your downloaded packages. Integrates in the context menu A very handy feature of this utility is that it seamlessly integrates in the right-click menu of Windows Explorer. In other words, you can simply access the context menu whenever you want to make sure your files have not been tampered with. The main window of OpenHashTab displays several types of hashes, and it also offers you the possibility to upload the package to VirusTotal to check it against multiple antivirus engines. Additionally, you can also compare any selected hash with another one that you paste in the dedicated field - these values need to be identical provided the file has not been modified in any way. Generates multiples types of hashes By default, the application generates certain types of hashes, namely: MD5, SHA-1, SHA-256, and SHA-512. However, you can access the Settings and choose some additional ones, such as CRC32, XXH32, RipeMD160, Blake2sp, K12-264, SHA3-512, PH128-264 and several others. You can also export these values to the clipboard or to a file that you can save for later review.
