All you need to do is hit the Alt key (on your keyboard's numeric keypad) and a list of keyboard shortcuts will appear. Using the keyboard shortcuts at the bottom of the window will give you the same effect as hitting the Tab key but for any screen-related operation: * You can use the ones on the right to shift through the windows on your screen. To use the shortcuts, press Alt+number, where number is how far you want to go. * You can use the ones on the left to move your current window from one screen to another. To use the shortcuts, press Shift+Alt+number, where number is how far you want to go. * You can use the ones in the middle to switch apps. To use the shortcuts, press Alt+Tab. * You can use the ones on the top to move backward in your applications. To use the shortcuts, press Ctrl+Tab. * If you are working with more than one app, you can use the Windows key + mouse wheel to scroll through them. * If you are using the right arrow key to go to the next menu or icon in the window, then it's probably labeled "Next," "Previous," or "Up." If that's the case, you can simply hold the key down and the right arrow should move it to the next icon or menu on the screen. * If the key does something different than that, you may need to adjust your settings. You can choose from one
