It has been reported that a high prevalence of osteoporosis is observed in women with cognitive dysfunction, but the relationship between osteoporosis and cognitive dysfunction remains unclear. In the present study, we examined the association between bone mineral density (BMD) and cognitive function in patients who visited a community hospital. Informed consent was obtained from all subjects. Subjects were 383 Japanese postmenopausal women. Age, body mass index, past medical history, the number of diseases (hypertension, dyslipidemia, diabetes, stroke, or heart disease), medications, BMD, grip strength and hip circumference were assessed as variables. A Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) was also conducted as a measure of cognitive function. With regard to the clinical variables, the BMD of the lumbar spine and femoral neck were negatively correlated with MMSE, attention, verbal memory, and the number of diseases ($r = -0.1$, -0.2, -0.3 and -0.4, respectively, p
