Wednesday, January 17, 2006 TinyPDF 0.6.2 released Description TinyPDF is a PDF creation library which can be used in your own programs. If you're thinking of creating a web site, you can use TinyPDF in your web server to generate PDF files and also to send a file to your visitors. If you're developing a desktop program that needs to print something out, you can generate a PDF from a document and then have the printer print the PDF file. The new version of TinyPDF is called TinyPDF 0.6.2 and the release is available to download now. Note: The above release is for Linux only. However, the source code is available for download. TinyPDF 0.6.2 release note This is an important update. New features and fixes: PDF creation: TinyPDF now has a full programmatic API for creating PDF documents. The PDF writer is part of the TinyPDF core, and there is a separate API to access it. The API has been tested and works. Compression support: TinyPDF can now add compression to PDF documents. You can use the API to add compression or use the PDF writer to add it. The PDF writer supports the various compression schemes: deflate bzip2 deflate, bzip2 and zip When you use the API to add compression, TinyPDF will automatically determine which compression scheme to use for your document. The PDF writer can only use one compression scheme per document. Rotation support: TinyPDF can now perform rotation on PDF files. The writer can perform the rotation itself or the API can be used. Script and formatting support: TinyPDF now supports encryption of PDF files. Scripts and form fields can now be placed in PDF documents.
