Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to bicycle frames, and more particularly, to a bicycle frame in which a frame member is asymmetrically shaped relative to the left and right sides of the bicycle frame. 2. Description of the Background Art Bicycling is becoming an increasingly more popular form of recreation as well as a means of transportation. Moreover, bicycling has become a very popular competitive sport for both amateurs and professionals. Whether the bicycle is used for recreation, transportation or competition, the bicycle industry is constantly improving the various components of the bicycle. Bicycling is a highly aerobic activity and can be strenuous on a person's body. The bicycle seat is a particularly important component in bicycle operation. A cyclist's weight is often supported by the bicycle seat, and the seat is therefore typically constructed to have high torsional rigidity so as to provide a stable base for the cyclist. However, high torsional rigidity of the bicycle seat may make the cyclist uncomfortable during long periods of time. Moreover, high torsional rigidity of the bicycle seat makes the bicycle seat unsuitable for use in competition cycling. In view of the above, it will be apparent to those skilled in the art from this disclosure that there exists a need for an improved bicycle frame. This invention addresses this need in the art as well as other needs, which will become apparent to those skilled in the art from this disclosure. The present invention provides a bicycle frame including a bicycle frame member and a head tube assembly. The bicycle frame member includes a head tube, an elbow tube extending upwardly from the head tube and having a top end, and a seat tube extending upwardly from the head tube and having a bottom end. The top end of the elbow tube is attached to the bottom end of the seat tube. The head tube, elbow tube and seat tube are arranged generally symmetrically about an imaginary vertical plane extending through the 3da54e8ca3
