A spiral that rotates is a spiral. A rotating spiral is called an exodar. Exodars come in several varieties: 1. exodar dendrites, 2. exodar laminae, 3. exodar ingulae, 4. exodar eikona, 5. exodar meridianana, 6. exodar obliqueana, 7. exodar magnata, 8. exodar capensis, 9. exodar pardiglis, 10. exodar cheirioides, 11. exodar isosceles. Exodar is packed with what seems like too many spirals of various shapes and sizes. Each spinning spiral is not only a randomly generated but also a time-varying pattern. There are two ways to make it run - either select the clock and uncheck the "Random" checkbox in the Options dialog box or open the Options dialog box directly after starting Exodar and toggle the "Random" checkbox. Choose between the 3 modes: 1. Random 2. Clock 3. Countdown Each mode has a brief description: "Random" mode is used as a "clock" for your computer. It means that every exodar that are running will take its own random timing, which means that you can never predict when the first exodar will be spinning. "Clock" mode simply gives the time as a running count down. The time shown is the "clock time" and does not change, but if the clock is running the count down will be sped up. "Countdown" mode is used when you have a desire to see many spirals running before they all have completed. It means that the first exodar will start while your computer is still loading Windows. After that you can use a countdown feature to know how many exodars will be running after startup. Note: Your time will be reported in hours, minutes and seconds (i.e. HH:MM:SS) To further increase the fun for you, there is a logarithmic scale in which the "countdown" graph is displayed in exodar size, exodar rotation rate and exodar rotation speed. It means you will see even more smaller exodars after a few seconds than before. Exodar has a lot 09e8f5149f

===== Exodar is a free screensaver that presents you some short-lined circles spinning around your desktop. The idea behind it is to represent that a series of laser flashes traveling inwards from the screen center and then they fade-out. The laser beams are emitting freely and the concept is that you don't need to calculate anything to get the effect of such a blind, but you can. When you close or move the window the effect is gone, but you will have a nice wake-up. As you can see Exodar is a smooth transition of the laser beams' paths, not really a continuous flash. How to remove the limits? =====

===== Exodar can't run as a screensaver in the desktop mode. You must change it to a standalone windows that can keep running even when you close it and it's difficult if you are not an expert. Go to the following link (and download an installer, that will install everything as a service with no limits and no popup from microsoft. You can see the limitations, both in version 4 and 5. Version 4: Version 5: ===== Note: If you get a "not enough information" from the link, you can still download the full exodar (exodar.exe). Then follow the instructions above to register for a free account. What's New In Exodar?

Exodar is a free screensaver that offers a peaceful and serene view of the celestial bodies. The sun's life cycle is beautifully illustrated with up to three suns in each dimension as well as colorful planets with up to 18 moons. A rolling moon slowly rises over the horizon. The Moon's path is shown in full phase during the night. Two suns rotate in counterpoint around a background sun in a hypnotic, planetary rhythm. The exact time of day can be seen on the clock. The result: an inspiring, serene view of nature's wonders. Powerful, but simple, Exodar is a multi-media educational tool for astronomy. Lovelace is a beautiful free screensaver for all your desktop needs. There are two versions of Lovelace: 1) Lovelace for Windows and 2) Lovelace for Mac. The Windows version is optimized for Pentium 200 or higher. Requirements: Pentium 200 or higher DirectX 6 or newer Graphic card with 4 or more MB of RAM Note: Although Lovelace is a free screensaver you must register for FREE to remove its limitations (it stops every time after 2 minutes of running). You can register by following the instructions here Lovelace Description: Lovelace screensaver is a beautiful and free 3d screensaver, based on famous Italian architect Gio Ponti's "cloud" concept. It represents the dynamic microcosmos of the universe in a form of a self-referential arrangement, hierarchically ordered and analyzed from the level of primary particles to the level of galaxies. Lovelace's pictures are taken from the 3D tessellation software "Nuit 3d" by Uchi. The screensaver 3D scene is designed for Pentium 200 or higher.
