These cover mechanisms usually include some type of snap fit between the cover mechanism and the electronic device. The snap fit is provided to prevent unintended separation of the cover mechanism from the device. For example, many modern consumer electronic devices include covers to protect the device from damage. The covers are provided to prevent inadvertent electronic device contact or exposure to the elements, such as rain, dust, debris, and so forth. Accordingly, the covers generally include some type of snap fit mechanism which typically includes at least one snap fit feature, such as a plurality of tabs extending from a cover to engage corresponding cam features in the electronic device.
