Reports from South Korea in January 2020 show that there have been some new 5G services launched in the country. It was reported that mobile carrier LGU+ (LG U+), launched its 5G service with 20 base stations at one site, showing South Korea's 5G technology is coming. The launch features 100 base station sites, with technology and capacity that meet the highly-demanded 5G requirements of the country. According to the company, the new LGU+ 5G network serves more than 160 cities and regions in the country to provide 5G services to mobile users. Another 5G network, SK Telecom, reportedly deployed 20 base stations and tested the 5G services for some content. It will be launching 5G services within the country by the year-end. Previously, there have been some claims made that 5G is not real as it is yet to be approved by the U.S. FCC. Given that the first 5G operators were rolled out in the U.S. last year, these claims appear to be somewhat misplaced. There has also been some speculation about whether it is legal to use 5G without FCC approval as the U.S. regulator has been silent on the matter. Experts contend that LTE and LTE Advanced are being used by most carriers without notification. Furthermore, there are speculations that the U.S. is actually the first G20 member to put down the 5G industrial standard. To be fair, however, the FCC has asked its international counterparts to avoid using the term '5G' as it could create confusions. It also wants them to coordinate their efforts on 5G in order to drive this standards development. The FCC has been very supportive of the deployment of 5G technologies in the U.S., and is focusing on helping carriers with planning and deploying 5G. Given that there are more than 200 commercial licenses for 5G on the books, the country might be ready to launch 5G services sooner than later. However, some countries such as China, Israel, Germany, Japan and South Korea have completed their 5G networks and are already making use of them. These countries are also developing 5G technologies such as millimeter-wave, which the U.S. is yet to fully develop.$2*q2 - q + 2$. What is $m(p)$? 10 Let $y(q) = q3 - 8*q$

Marriage of convenience: a new JNUSU president rethinks her position [Credit: Vishal / Wikimedia Commons] By [Credit: CNST / Wikimedia Commons] MBA Editor's note: Devika Nirain Doshi is a fourth-year student at the Ramjas College and the Student Editor of the Financial Express. New JNUSU President and class of 2013 recipient of the Chancellor's Prize for Distinction in Education, and founder member of Association of Law Students of India (ALSI), Devika Nirain Doshi believes in a "marriage of convenience." And it is no big secret that her sole ambition is to win an IPS or some other post — given that she already holds the "marriage of convenience" of the Council President to boot. But instead of being angry with the coalition's supporters, she is stunned that they seem to be unwilling to change their approach and be "married" to her. Let's take a peek into a fascinating, and possibly, eye-opening conversation between Devika and the correspondent of the Financial Express. The Financial Express: Devika, you must have not accepted the role of the JNUSU President voluntarily. Did you become the president because you know you have no future in the organisation or is the whole thing part of a wider conspiracy? Devika: A little of both. There is a huge unknown factor involved in this. I don't think the whole thing is a conspiracy. The fact that the coalition decided to support you says a lot. Even the decision to elect a new JNUSU President first went to the office-bearers, which was marred by arguments in how they would go about it, and if the way they had decided was not right. I was one of those office-bearers. But this is not a move in a conspiracy by the establishment. This is just a move in interest of students' rights. Students at JNU are largely not in favour of a typical central university structure. They are more into having an independent JNU which is not controlled by any central body. It was a move in this spirit. And the students' so-called leaders — the union leaders at JNU — did not see any major movement that benefited students. I felt it would be a good idea to have a senior student from
