In the article titled "Clinical outcomes, complications and quality of life after modified endoscopic transsphenoidal microadenomectomy": The authors found a significantly greater risk of relapse following revision surgery after a first SPN. It is acknowledged that the findings may be subject to at least a few limitations. We believe, however, that a major flaw of this study is that only 10% of the first surgeries were revised; a clear selection bias is inherent. There is a minor typographical error in the paper. The Authors would like to apologize for any inconvenience caused to the readers by these errors.
