Photoshop Elements, you will open the program and get used to the interface. 2. If you're going to use the tool to create new images, I suggest you get used to the tools and make sure you know all the menu commands before you use the tools. I think that's the best way to get things done. 3. To place items on the screen, you can use the letters on the bottom left corner of the screen to type the coordinates. E.g: Delete: Shift-Delete to delete everything in a certain area. 4. To resize something, you can use the windows(called window view, the screenshot below) Drag left or right with the mouse to resize. Click and drag to change the size of the image at a certain area in the screen, (or select a specific area in the left side of the window(another window to show the different size of the selected item)). Q: Select all elements if there is only 1 select I have an html which looks like this: some textRemove some textRemove some textRemove some textRemove I am trying to implement an array where there can only be 1 element selected at a time ex. [2,1,4] If user selects 4 it means they only want the list to contain 1 element, so they will then select the other elements. After selecting, the form is submitted and an ajax is called and I check if the array contains more than one item and do this: `if(array_size($_POST['subjects']) > 1) { echo 'alert("Multiple subjects selected!");'; exit(); }`

This just does not seem to work. The alert "Multiple subjects selected!" does not appear when I try the form. How can I do this? A: You can use count for that: `if(count($_POST['subjects']) > 1) {` You should not use exit in the script output. Q: How to include mysql driver in pthread? In my c++ code, I want to use mysql_conn to connect MySQL database. The code is here `#include // my-SQL C API header file #include pthread_mutex_t mutex; int main(int argc, char *argv[]) { mysql_init(NULL, NULL);
mysql_real_connect(NULL, "localhost", "root`
