Learn Photoshop from the ground up. 3,5-Dicarbomethoxy-N-[(3S)-1-(1-hydroxy-2-methylpropan-2-yl)pyrrolidin-3-yl]-1-benzofuran-2-carboxamide (also known as Entrectinib) was initially investigated at the UCSF Clinical Pharmacology Institute for oncological indications, and this compound has been found to specifically bind to the mutated receptor tyrosine kinase (RTK) mutant, FGFR3-TACC1 (WCLS). Entrectinib is the first drug to target both FGFR3-TACC1 mutant and FGFR3 wild type. The FGFR3-TACC1 fusion protein drives malignant cell proliferation and survival in vitro and in vivo via a constitutive and ligand-independent activation of the FGFR3 kinase, and is expressed in about 50% of the cases of multiple myeloma (MM) and about 10% of the cases of acute myeloid leukemia (AML). The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved Entrectinib in June 2014 as a breakthrough therapy drug for adult patients with locally advanced or metastatic solid tumors harboring a somatic mutation of the FGFR3 gene. Maine Shows Love For Mamas Well, I'm a sucka for mamas and a hater for nannies. I think both are very important. I love having my son around as my beloved confidant and for the time being, I'm responsible for him while his mom is away at work. Sometimes my son needs to be around someone other than me. So in these situations, I use a nanny. Do you use a nanny? What works for you? If you would like to share some ideas, feel free to let me know! Q: How to find id's of rows that match two sets of values in two columns I have a data set similar to below. How do I get the row with id = "1" and id = "4"? I want to try to match ID with values in Stock_locations1 and stock_locations2.

ID	Stock_locations1	Stock_locations2
3	2	2
2	5	3
3	3	7
4	4	4
1	A	1

A: As I already hinted by the names of the columns, you should use merge or outer. You can try the following way:

```
outer(df1[c('Stock_locations1', 'Stock_locations2')],
```

```
df2[c('Stock_locations1',
'Stock_locations2')], ">") # ID
Stock_locations1 Stock_locations2 # 1

Q: Update value in SQL Server 2008 from PHP code I'm trying to update a value in SQL Server 2008 from PHP code. The SQL Server is running on a remote server but I'm able to login to it via PHP Here is the code: $sql = "UPDATE [DB1].[dbo].[TestTable] SET [Field1] = $myValue"; echo $sql; $stmt = sqlsrv_query($conn, $sql); if ($stmt === false) { die(print_r(sqlsrv_errors(), true)); } The field has a value of 2 in the database, so the value should be updated to 3. Instead, the value stays the same. I'm using php 5.3.14 and the server is running win2008. Could anyone help me? A: It looks like you need to add a query inside your statement: $sql = "UPDATE [DB1].[dbo].[TestTable] SET [Field1] = {$myValue}"; Q: BarChart - how to set the values on the right side of the x-axis? I have a data file in which each line has the datetime, the windspeed and the airpressure. I have a problem in a BarChart, where the x-axis and y-axis have been created. The problem is the x-axis, where the values are displayed, but in the reversed order, the data being displayed as follows:

2015-10-25T14:20:00.000+02:00 -9.4

The values -9.4 and 14:20:00.000 are part
