In previous editions of the series, players were tracked with a camera helmet and players were surrounded by their former teammates, which made it clear that the player had been timed and tracked. HyperMotion uses a combination of the high-grade artificial intelligence (AI) and machine learning (ML) that creates avatars from player video data that more accurately reflect the real world players. In FIFA 22, players will deliver more accurate AI, more actions and more realistic ball control. You will notice that your opponents have the ability to “twist,” “bend” and “slide” the ball in ways that are not possible in real life. Also, FIFA now delivers more accurate ball physics using SLAM technology. You will have more control with your passes and defense. You will recover more quickly after receiving the ball. You will see that the artificial intelligence reacts better to your passes, with greater accuracy and tighter controls. For everyone, FIFA Ultimate Team (FUT) will feel more similar to real-life football. A more accurate AI The AI has been improved based on your gameplay and your players’ FUT ratings. For example, the AI will learn when you are driving towards your opponent, when they are diving towards the ground, if they are in a position to take a shot on goal, or to push forward and attack the ball. When you score a goal, the AI will reward the player who was in the right position, and the player who was a threat in the area. When your striker gets a chance at goal, the AI will decide which opponent to prioritize – if you have multiple attackers, the AI will choose the most threatening one. The AI is also able to make its decision based on your players’ play style and the players’ ability. Improved simulation of real-life movements FIFA’s AI always takes the ball into account and they also anticipate where the ball is going to go next. Now, the AI is able to follow a real-life path based on their targeted position on the ball. The movements of real-life players are replicated more accurately. You will notice a more realistic play style in games such as dribbling, passing, shooting and tackling. You will also see fewer games where AI controlled players make the wrong moves. The AI is never “blind” and there will be no situations where the AI
