Activation of the nuclear beta-catenin pathway mediates apoptosis by ErbB receptor tyrosine kinases: implications for tumor progression. It has become increasingly apparent that beta-catenin is involved in a wide variety of cellular processes, including growth arrest and apoptosis. In this study, we have generated both cell lines and human tumors with defined alterations of beta-catenin activity and have analyzed the relationship between beta-catenin activity and cell survival. Our analyses demonstrate that the epidermal growth factor receptor (ErbB), one of the most common oncogenic receptor tyrosine kinases, stimulates the nuclear beta-catenin pathway, which in turn induces apoptosis. Moreover, we provide evidence that an activated nuclear beta-catenin pathway can be a critical mediator of the malignant phenotype, which explains why nuclear beta-catenin is commonly expressed in human tumors such as carcinomas with an aggressive phenotype.Q: Keeping data synced between iCloud.com and my laptop when offline I'm looking for a way to keep my data on my Mac updated and synced when my laptop is offline, such that data like Settings, contact list, etc is kept up to date.
