This game is important, not just because the Dallas Cowboys are 3-0 so far this year, but because this game means so much more than simply winning. Last year in Week 13, the Bills crushed the Cowboys 41-3. It was the first time in a decade that the Cowboys lost three consecutive games against an AFC team. This time around, the Bills have three more opportunities to give up the biggest embarrassment in franchise history, and it's all because of a mistake. On the first play from scrimmage, Cowboys defensive back Brandon Carr jumped a route that left Buffalo receiver Stevie Johnson wide open for a long touchdown pass. No matter what the fans may believe, that was a fumble. And it happened in the middle of the field. Despite the fact that the two teams have played twice already, these two teams have yet to play a game. The Bills haven't even actually laid eyes on Tony Romo, if that's what you're asking. Romo has been on the sidelines, and while this is definitely good news for the Bills, it's bad news for the Cowboys. In the first game, the Cowboys were playing against a Patriots team with an average offense. The Patriots have only averaged 19.3 points per game this season. The Colts were a different story. That Colts team scored a whopping 37.5 points per game with Andrew Luck at guarterback. The Cowboys, on the other hand, have played three games with their rookie quarterback, Dak Prescott. He has yet to play on a sunny day and has yet to be under pressure. It's a lot to ask of a rookie. The reason why it is so important for the Bills to show the Cowboys a thing or two is because of the national perception the Bills are so much better than the Cowboys. Most Cowboys fans would likely know nothing about head coach Rex Ryan and his reputation for "being negative." Also, the

I think there are probably only a dozen or so games like this that exist today, although several have been removed from retail shelves. Still, a seller out there on eBay or similar might be able to oblige you. I just don't know how likely it is to happen. Bigtits, images only. t-shirts. t-shirts. New York City has a lot of old buildings. There were a lot of fires. And yes, the symbolism of the date, 12-12-12 is pretty clear. But for all the talk of the significance of that date being "significant," the number remains meaningless. Bigger tits, images only. t-shirts. images only. t-shirts. nodes that are missing. So let's say I have the following: CREATE (:Person {name:'Joe'}),(:Person {name:'Bob'}),(:Person {name:'Alice'}) CREATE (:Person {name:'Jim'}),(:Person {name:'Dave'}) CREATE (:Person {name:'Charles'}),(:Person {name:'Sam'}) And let's say I have inserted all these into the db, yet let's say Alice has just left, so I still have Joe, Bob, Charles and Sam So I want to find the missing node's ID. If I use: MATCH (p:Person) WHERE ID(p)!= 0 RETURN ID(p) In other words the missing nodes are Alice, Jim, Dave and Mike. How can I implement this in Cypher to find the missing nodes? A: Here's an easy way of doing it, using labels: MATCH (p:Person) 0 AND ID(I) 0 RETURN ID(I) Label nodes are implicit, so we don't have to use explicit node labels (:Person), and we also don't need to explicitly return the node ID.
