Surgeon-Specific and Surgeon-Site-Specific Mortality After Transcatheter Aortic Valve Replacement Versus Surgical Aortic Valve Replacement: A Population-Based Cohort Study. Patients with severe symptomatic aortic stenosis who are not surgical candidates are increasingly being offered transcatheter aortic valve replacement (TAVR). It remains unknown whether there is a difference in survival between TAVR versus surgical aortic valve replacement (SAVR) patients. The objective of this study was to examine the risk of 30-day and long-term mortality after TAVR versus SAVR in patients with severe symptomatic aortic stenosis who were not suitable for surgical therapy. A population-based cohort study was conducted using the linked administrative databases of the Canadian Institute for Health Information Discharge Abstract Database, Registered Persons Database, and Canadian Community Health Survey to identify patients who had a hospitalization for aortic stenosis, underwent TAVR, and were alive at discharge in Ontario from January 1, 2010, to April 30, 2013. All-cause and cause-specific mortality at 30 days and 1 year were compared among TAVR versus SAVR groups using a propensity score-weighted analysis. Of the 285,023 patients included in the study cohort, 11,591 underwent SAVR and 4,310 underwent TAVR during the study period. There was no difference in median age (80 vs 80 years) or sex (63% vs 64%) between the TAVR and SAVR groups, respectively. The 30-day mortality was 1.1% after TAVR and 0.3% after SAVR (odds ratio 3.5, 95% confidence interval 3.0 to 4.0). At 1-year postdischarge, the mortality was 2.9% after TAVR and 2.3% after SAVR (hazard ratio 0.9, 95% confidence interval 0.8 to 1.0). In a propensity score-weighted analysis, there were no difference in all-cause mortality at 30 days or 1 year between TAVR and SAVR patients (all-cause mortality: hazard ratio 1.0, 95% confidence interval 0.99 to 1.02). Postoperative bleeding occurred in 2.7% of the TAVR patients and 0.5% of the SAVR patients (odds ratio 4.3, 95% confidence interval 3.6 to 5.0).
