Dunnell, Jr., et al. discloses a method of manufacturing a spin-on-glass (SOG) planarizing layer by silane capillary filling of a trench formed in a silicon substrate. In this method, the SOG is preferably applied in one step, usually following a high temperature reflow step. However, SOG layers can be applied in two different ways. In the first of these two methods, the SOG may be deposited as a liquid on the wafer surface with a thin layer of solvent, such as acetone, followed by solvent evaporation to drive off the solvent. In a second method, the SOG is applied as a spin-on film, which is then cured at elevated temperatures, such as 300.degree. C. As yet another method, the SOG is deposited on a heated wafer by flowing a mixture of the SOG and a solvent, such as methyl ethyl ketone, into trenches on a surface of the wafer. The mixture will flow up the sides of the trench d0c515b9f4
