The first Ladies' Equal Rights Association was established on the East Coast, in Boston. The first official endorsement of universal suffrage was made by President Abraham Lincoln during the American Civil War. After the conflict, the vote was extended to black men, of any ability, in Reconstruction. The Fifteenth Amendment was passed, guaranteeing the right to vote for all citizens. The passage of the Amendment was assisted by such abolitionists as Lucretia Mott, William Lloyd Garrison, and Wendell Phillips. The Nineteenth Amendment was passed in 1920. The passage of this Amendment took a considerable amount of time, but was met with a different response during the Civil War. Black men who enlisted in the Union forces were able to vote once they were discharged, whereas the Southern states had created the "test" with all of the rights, but no privileges. In addition to this, there were the Fifteenth Amendment was passed. The Nineteenth Amendment saw some radical changes meet with little dissent. The women's vote was obtained in 1920 and was a short time later than the men. While women had lobbied to obtain the vote, men of the military "bought" women's suffrage. The Nineteenth Amendment was never fully enforced because of a clause that had been deliberately added, known as the "male qualification." Only men who were able-bodied were allowed to vote in presidential elections. The Twenty-fourth Amendment was ratified in 1964, allowing for the abolition of poll taxes. This happened after the Civil Rights Movement, when more and more people started to take a stand against poll taxes. The Twenty-sixth Amendment was ratified in 1971, expanding the vote to include women of all races, so long as they met the property and educational requirements. This was a big step forward for women, but also for women of color, who had been excluded 1cd3b3666dd

The use of breast-conserving surgery (BCS) for the treatment of early breast cancer has been increasing steadily in the United States over the past decade. This study examines trends in the use of BCS from 1994 through 2000 and the impact of patient, disease, and hospital factors on the likelihood of receiving BCS. Data from the National Cancer Institute's Surveillance, Epidemiology, and End Results (SEER) program (1994-2000) were analyzed using unconditional logistic regression to estimate relative risks (RR) of receiving BCS versus mastectomy. Poisson regression was used to determine factors associated with receiving BCS. The proportion of women aged 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to hand held guns and, more particularly, to the safe storage of such hand held guns. 2. Description of the Prior Art The proliferation of high powered rifles, handguns, and similar hand held weapons over the past 100 years has resulted in a large increase in the number of accidents and injuries caused by improperly or unintentionally discharged weapons. In order to prevent such accidents, all states
