Nike Zoom 'boonie' Off the back of the LeBron James and Michael Jordan collaboration with Jordan Brand, Nike Football are back to bring us another LeBron shoe. This one came out with the "boonie" suffix to differentiate it from the other LeBron shoes and Nike 4 "boonie" styles on the market. The footwear features a black upper with tumbled leather lining and details on the rear, and come equipped with the "boonie" logo on the tongue as well as a fitted lacing system. A pack of three pairs will be available at the Nike Store. The price tag will be between $100 and $120. "The NHS is a vital part of our NHS." (Foster and Drummond / Michael Gray / PA) It was May last year when the government published a consultation paper calling on the NHS to undertake a range of changes to its business. But it doesn't appear to have asked important and basic questions, such as: • How, exactly, does the NHS fit into the Government's plans for a One Nation Health Service that provides a vision of care for all? • What is the evidence that integrating the NHS with social care, currently undertaken on an ad hoc basis, can deliver the savings the government promised? • Will the NHS be required to meet competition rules when it merges with social care or have a regulator (ie "An NHS Commissioning Body" with its own competitors) to prevent commercial competition being introduced? • How much extra will this cost and who will pay for it? • Will NHS chief executives be accountable for the "hafteh" impacts of their decisions? • Which changes are needed to health service management systems to allow information to flow seamlessly from primary to secondary care? • Where are the proposals to integrate GP practices, where there are viable alternatives to centralisation of GP services? • Where are the proposals to allow for the delivery of NHS "last mile" services in social care and residential care settings? • Where are the proposals to open up public health services across England to competition? • What is the evidence that a range of new market forces can and will deliver better outcomes for patient care, including improving service experiences and lowering prices? • What are the plans to support long-
