A lightweight and easy-to-handle piece of software created to assist you in transferring files to other locations, creating playlists and organizing your collection with minimal effort. The Musical Machine (Proximan) is an Internet radio application and streaming server that runs on a Raspberry Pi and can be controlled by a smartphone or tablet via SMS, MMS or Bluetooth. It was released for the first time in 2011 as a plugin for the Soviet Internet radio aggregator, Sputnik. The Android port was made available for download in 2012, and in 2013 the project achieved success on Kickstarter, raising a total of $47,704 (€35,132). Application installed on a Raspberry Pi with a microphone attached The Musical Machine app, developed by the Polish company Proximan and presented on Kickstarter and published by the Californian company Backflip, turns a Raspberry Pi with a USB microphone attached into a service that can be controlled remotely, thanks to either SMS, MMS or a Bluetooth connection from a smartphone or tablet. The streaming server can also be controlled by a smartphone or tablet via SMS or Bluetooth, allowing any song to be played by sending a request through the sender's number. The request must be formatted using a particular SMS command. The app has been designed to work with the Raspberry Pi, and it will not run with other devices (including Android systems). For the time being, it has no internet connection support. However, the developer has released a version for Debian users (Ubuntu users can download it directly from the project's site and add support for auto-update and the SNMP architecture). The Raspberry Pi is well-suited to becoming a streaming server: the unit consumes a low amount of power, it is not very expensive and it has plenty of memory. For those looking to obtain their own Raspberry Pi to use as a streaming server, there are many models available at a reasonable price. It is currently not possible to find only a streaming server based on a Raspberry Pi on the market, as the units sold by companies like RetroPi or TechBuoy, which are equipped with an operating system, lack a microphone or other essential elements. This system runs very slowly compared to a standard model, but it is very cheap. As for the
