"We saw in FIFA 20 a move to match player movement more accurately to the real thing, but until now we have struggled with how best to do this," said David Rutter, Global Brand Director for FIFA at

EA Sports. "The HyperMotion technology developed for this year has resulted in a gameplay experience that truly feels like the real thing." While FIFA 20 felt a bit slow and sluggish due to it taking place in real time rather than on a played/recording match, FIFA 22 is based on a full match played in real time on Xbox One and PlayStation 4. EA has also increased the number of ways you can play a game during a match, including in First Person View, player scouting, field of view and even free-flowing online tournaments, as well as a new Shot Stacks feature which makes all players closest to the ball visible at once. The company has also made an update to the FIFA Ultimate Team card gaining and losing system to respond to new IPs, and making card gains less obvious. EA says the changes are aimed at lessening card gains for those with time-limited Ultimate Teams and those which fail to unseat strong opposition. Those changes plus a new option to have your players earn new appearance items in packs so you can customize a player look will be available in a free update coming to the game later this year. It is FIFA's second title in a row that is available on the PlayStation 4, after FIFA 19 was a PlayStation 4 launch title and the third game in a row to debut on the platform following FIFA 18 and FIFA 19. The game can be purchased for the PlayStation 4 or Xbox One with a season pass that allows new content to be bought digitally, like the video game FIFA 19.

The game will also be playable at EA Play this week, where it will be the first time FIFA 22 will be playable on the showfloor of the PlayStation Experience event. The demo will be available to play at the show from December 4th-7th. Sky's Goalkeeper Post-Euro2016: What's Next For Keylor Navas And Thibaut Courtois? It's a curious time for the two men who keep the ball out for PFA Team of the Year front-runner Gareth Southgate's England. Not that Gareth Southgate needs any additional praise for picking his young Arsenal and Real Madrid starlets to succeed
