red fatso,' he says. 'I'm not a red fatso,' says David. 'My skin's the colour of a plucked hen, I'm dying to be able to say: I'm a fat gazelle. So try and stop me, my sister.' He grins and shrugs when I speak to him as if I'm in the films, but it doesn't fool his mother for a moment. 'So, what did you want to tell me?' He starts to tell me about an English girl who came to spend the weekend at the villa. The shot will have to wait, he thinks. In the meantime I can talk to his mother. 'What d'you think about when you're out there all alone?' I ask her. 'All the wine bottles you drink, in the middle of the sea?' She starts speaking in Italian again, but her lips are blue, like teacups filled with boiling water. 'It's a secret,' she says. 'Let's talk later, when I'm asleep.' 'She thinks the villa's bugged,' says David. 'She's brought some of her own tapes to listen to while she's there. She says she's clever.' We visit his house. It's a big tower block on the coast. His mother doesn't like it because it's close to the seafront. In her eyes all towers resemble prisons. She hopes that David will leave it and live in the villa. 'Why don't you live in the villa instead?' she says. 'Because I'm better at the house than at the villa,' he says. 'Much better.' 'Can you play chess on the gramophone?' I ask him. 'It's a gramophone,' he says. 'I can do anything on it.' 'All right,' I say. 'Let's go to the cinema then.' 'The cinema's for girls,' he says. 'We'll buy milk for your sister and get her something to eat.' 'I wouldn't say no to bread and milk,' he says, 'if there are two loaves.' 'There are.' 'I'll be hungry,' he says. I'm never hungry for another person. But I tell him so. 'That's because you're always up against Sunday, March 24, 2012 Our Melanoma story so far... (SAD) November 2011 - Nick and I went to a melanoma seminar to discuss the status of our newly diagnosed melanoma, including the risk of the skin over my bump having a second tumor. December 2011 - Nick was diagnosed with Stage IV melanoma. I had met with the oncologist and discussed the ramifications of starting without the protocol as we had decided to do together. I had met with the Head Surgeon and discussed the melanoma and if it had spread to other parts of Nick's body as well. She suggested routine MRI scans. January 2012 - I posted a blog about how I was feeling. I am particularly interested in how I feel now, and what I feel as we go forward. January 2012 - MRI reports from Neurologist Feb 7th 2012 - visit to Neurologist March 2012 - I was given the green light to start the ACTIVE protocol with Dr. Cridgley. March 2012 - After my initial injection/weekly review, we noticed a pin point spot above my right hip and my right buttock. I had to wait about a month for my follow up blood test to check for a baseline for my ACTIVE T790M. We returned to Dr. Cridgley's office and I was given a slight elevation and given instructions to visit Dr. Mar. I was also ordered to use a violet rubber tourniquet around my upper thigh. March 2012 - My follow up blood test showed an increase, so Nick and I returned to Dr. Cridgley's office for an ultrasound and biopsy. An abscess was found in my right hip and they decided to drain it. March 2012 - We again returned to Dr. Cridgley's office to discuss further procedures for the melanoma. We had decided to do the Interferon with an injection into my upper thigh, a procedure that Dr. Cridgley had requested we do in the next week or two. We would be given the results of both the week 2 blood test as well as a biopsy (which is another procedure). He would also do a CT scan every three months and we would be given a recommended follow up. March 2012 - We decided to do the Immunotherapy with Dr. Weintraub. He put a small needle into my buttock and another into my upper thigh. There was some bruising
